

How Rome and Babylon subvert organizations

'Turn off your mind, relax and float downstream
It is not dying, it is not dying...'

- The Beatles, 'Tomorrow Never Knows'

The apostate system uses two major primary methods for their subversion of external organizations. The first is their system of non-overt symbolism, which they use to coordinate the efforts of their personnel as a form of espionage. The second is more fundamental: the distortion of Divine Will principles and values. This includes not only careful and strategic means of finding subtle ways to violate Divine Will principles which aren't immediately apparent to the general public which prevalently doesn't understand those principles, but also the cautious, strategic and calculated use of their existing assets to get the general public to first violate and then abandon their existing values and principles, until the caliber of both the individual and their society is drastically reduced, they no longer remember their original values and principles, they've accepted a substitute counterfeit model for them, and the vast majority of people in their society no longer care much about them either way. Both their system of non-overt symbolism and their method of subverting people on values and principles are used together, with each method complimenting the other. This is a slow, gradual and strategic process, usually taking generations to accomplish. Organizationally, they're very patient. After all, they've been around throughout the majority of recorded human history and are quite willing to wait if necessary in order to accomplish their objectives.

The process very much resembles that of a factory. Typically factories receive raw materials at one end, and each station processes them in some way into what will eventually become the finished, desired goods. The desired goods here are a People who no longer remember nor care about their fundamental principles, rights, basis of law, or Divine Will principles, and will accept the apostate system as having the unassailable authority 'of gods incarnate', wielding control both politically and in a religious sense. A People who no longer have any means of asserting their independence, nor even ideally seeing any need to do so. We can evaluate how advanced the process is currently by noticing how estranged from, and unknowledgeable of, their values the People have become, and how much is left to do by comparing our present situation against the eventual results ultimately desired by the apostate system. They've accomplished quite a bit already, but there's still plenty more to do. Whether that's going to be feasible given the exposure of the apostate system remains to be seen. The People are likely to reject a system that routinely performs massive public frauds and rights abuses against them, and regards them as little more than raw material to be processed according to their agendas.

The apostate system uses the symbol "bricks" to represent a standardized, uniform People who become emplaced into their system to build their “temples”. It’s a “fire” + “earth” symbol. By contrast, the Christian system uses “rock” to symbolize the Creator and demands that ‘no hewn stone’ be used to build its churches, because the Creator is already perfect. The apostate system is nowhere near ready to implement its system on an “earth”, or overt, basis yet, but we can see inklings of its preparation to do so with the so-called ‘BRICS’ economic alliance whose globalist nature has been deftly exposed by RedefiningGod.com.

Here’s an overview, in order, of the ‘processing stations’, or stages, used by the apostate system in subverting various external groups, both overt and non-overt.

Leadership - Either the organization creates a new, superficially-distinct franchise group under its control, or it gets the lead authority figures within an existing organization to 'sell out'. Whichever they do, the next objective becomes to subvert the lower ranks in the organization carefully and gradually. [This is often referred to symbolically as “threading the needle”.]

Drab - Subtly use the leadership to 'drive a wedge' into the group. For example, to have a staunch and increasingly stringent 'moral' contingent within it enact evermore vigorous, stern, and unnecessarily repressive policies under the auspices of 'righteousness', and set increasingly regimented and officious policies and doctrines that some members will continue to support, and which will privately disenfranchise others within its ranks. The objective here is to create a 'Problem', for which there will later be provided a 'Solution' that's already been carefully and exactly calculated.

Non-overt - Implement within the group a non-overt system of symbolism if it doesn't already exist. [If it does, skip directly to the next step.] Many well-sounding arguments exist in favor of accepting this mechanism: hyped at this juncture for example is the ability it would afford to the group to uphold its principles and policies against the non-overt encroachment of outside groups, or to manage an increasing internal division based on potential schisms due to stern internal policies.

Colors - Now that personnel are using non-overt symbolism in their interactions, bring on multiple outsider groups and interests. Make them appear novel, exciting and attractive, with benefits to entice people to them and plenty of alternate rulesets. With the Freemasons for example, the ‘other’ first represented an emphasis on fun, frivolity, recreation and entertainment as a shift away from sound values and education. These ‘others’ typically have their own non-overt lingo and become apparent competing in-groups in and of themselves, which pull personnel loyalty away from the main group. The first personnel to do so are able to ‘get in on the ground floor’ and establish themselves first, enhancing their prospects for advancing within the ‘other’ group.

Antagonist - As the years or decades pass, the ‘other’ group begins attracting growing support and affiliation away from the original group. Increasing numbers of personnel abandon their non-overt group identification with the original group and instead non-overtly affiliate themselves with the ‘other’. If - as is usually the case - this ‘other’ provides non-overt methods to get around the law, the 'other' group begins to systematically blackmail its members, demanding complicity and service without compensation. This is done quietly, while it continues to publicly present itself as providing all the benefits that it has been offering all along. New members are offered extra advantages and incentives [free drugs, better rates, etc.] if they'll publicly profess reprehensible sociopolitical positions the 'other' group deems favorable [the Knights of Malta used to do this with racism and white supremacy, for example]. While this appears to be to enable the 'other' group to 'take over', it's more a loyalty test for recruits. The more intensely they clamor in support of its awful values, the more acceptance, trust and esteem they have within it. This enables them to advance within the ranks, and if needed they're expendable patsies for law enforcement or public credibility needs.

Alternatively or in conjunction with this, the original group itself also is diminishing its standards. Remember, those in the leadership roles there are already in collusion.

Good examples of this Antagonist method include Scottish Rite Freemasonry as the supposed antagonist group for the rest of Freemasonry, and the Knights of Malta currently set as the supposed antagonists with the Asian dynastic groups whose leaders have already quietly sold out to Babylon.

Muffle - With the 'other' group as an apparent antagonist, the supposed threat of non-overt encroachment against the original group and the threat it presents towards society is usually sufficient to convince 'Ordinary Joe' members within the original group that defeating them requires them to tone down their efforts overtly and non-overtly, and 'hide' non-overtly by presenting their symbolism with ambiguity to blur the distinction about their own group membership... that is, whether they belong to the original group, or the 'other' group. The idea being sold to them is that of a supposed need for stealth, need to hide, need for 'camouflage'. Of course this just diminishes their standard of behavior, and members find the standards diminishing evermore, while the 'other' group becomes more and more active, pronounced and dominant in support of its apparent ambitions.

This is approximately when personnel are persuaded to use what is actually Babylonian Kabbalism's "Gemini" or "twin" symbols, they just don't know what they actually signify. They naturally assume that those refer to the ambiguity they were directed to maintain as to whether their allegiance is to the original group, or to the Antagonist group. In actuality it references the Babylonian Kabbalists presenting a counterfeit of itself, which it will eventually remove leaving only itself.

Attrition - This is the stage of progressed and prolonged seeming conflict between the original group and the Antagonist group. Various maneuverings and counter-maneuverings are presented for the personnel of both groups, on any number of pretexts, while the members of the original group innocently wait trustingly for their authority figures to use the assets of their organization to shut down the Antagonist group for good.

Of course that was never the idea. Both the original group and the antagonist group are gradually, actively and systematically working to get their personnel to accept a counter-Divine Will basis. This usually involves either the blackmail described above, or a 'glass ceiling' of advancement within the organization for those who haven't or won't. Because those personnel who have already accepted a counter-Divine Will basis are able to coordinate their efforts discreetly, as well as single out individual members and maneuver them into compromising or vulnerable positions either just within their respective organizations or using the dynamic of tension between the original group and the antagonist group, personnel usually convert on an individual basis since effectively 'the whole system is against them' until they do.

By this stage personnel within the original group who've started using the "Gmini" or "twin" symbolism predominate within it, and those using counter-Divine Will symbolism to signify a knowing, Willful and avoidable counter-Divine Will position are proliferating within it. Once the use of counter-Divine Will symbolism predominates it becomes a clear indicator to the apostate system that the personnel have been effectively subverted, and the pretense of "Gmini" and "twin" symbols is abandoned. This is done not only by de-emphasizing usage of the symbol greatly, but also by using it accompanied by a counter-Divine Will symbol as a sort of 'negation' concept. Those personnel refusing to do so are eventually 'sorted out' through elaborate non-overt schemes which are enacted systematically, including rejection by the organization either directly or tacitly, entrapment and subsequent incarceration, or even it appears by taking their lives in some instances.

Triumph - The apparent 'triumph' of the 'other' group enables the original group to be packed up and closed down for good. This is comparatively easy to accomplish, because the 'other' group was just a dummy group being run by the principal, and the original group had sold out to that same principal group ages ago. The symbolism of the original group is made to disappear, transitioning over to that of the parent group. Various factions that still appear to be the original group, but aren't, are degraded and made unappealing to the general public: Zionist faux-Jews and bigoted faux-Christians churned out by televangelists and megachurches are great examples of this, and they're presented to the general public as being accurate examples of the original group until the general public comes to revile them and wants to get rid of them.

Vilify - With the original group now gone, the dummy 'other' group has fulfilled its purpose and is no longer necessary. In fact the various 'bad guy' villainous behavior it's performed up to this point in order to serve its purpose is now an embarrassment and PR nightmare to the parent group if the public make the association between them both; the dummy group is now a liability. However, the parent group excels at turning these sorts of liabilities to their advantage. The strategy here is to intensify the vilification of the dummy group, making the behavior of its members even more debased and reprehensible. And typically, causing it to exacerbate any flaws in the morals and reasoning of its stated behavior and methodology. The dummy group becomes seen by the general public - either on the overt or non-overt levels - as a group based on a defective, problematic and unsafe basis. The general public begins to increasingly resent the dummy group, but has little alternative option than to support it by necessity. The dummy group becomes a social question without an answer.

[It's at roughly this stage, occasionally earlier, occasionally later, that malcontents tend to occur within the group who are catching onto the globalist nature of the organization[s] involved, or at least take exception to some of its methods. Rome and Babylon have a standard counterstrategy for this. It's to establish yet another non-overt dummy faction, a splinter faction, within the organization[s] involved. It of course directs the activities of said faction, and as the term "splinter" itself symbolically describes its purpose is primarily to get the personnel within the faction, on any number of pretexts and for any number of reasons, to fall victim to their "penetration" strategy. That is, to keep their standards marginal at best and continue to diminish them: keeping their efforts on a non-overt basis [which also buys Rome and Babylon plenty of time to manipulate and subvert them], promoting unworthy values such as a lack of honesty even on a non-overt basis, and demeaning behavior towards each other and the general public. Their 'Pink' scene makes a good overt depiction of this, including the symbolism inherent in all the omnipresent "spikes" of its aesthetic. The malcontents with these splinter factions are encouraged to try to overcome Rome and Babylon essentially by non-integrus methods, eventually leading to the factions' own disfavor and abandonment. Of course its personnel are also strategically encouraged to knowingly, Willfully and avoidably Choose a counter-Divine Will basis for themselves as well; with not much of a hierarchical internal authority upholding better standards and practices, the reasons to reject low standards and values don't seem quite as evident to those personnel and so the temptation is greater. It's worth noticing that although splinter faction personnel are encouraged to attempt overcoming Rome and Babylon by methods which lack integrity, that basis is directly counterproductive to their efforts and to their quality of life in general. Consider: Rome and Babylon have themselves infiltrated, subverted, manipulated and usurped by less than legitimate and integrus methods. If they have a vulnerability organizationally, it's not to unintegrus methods with which they excel. It's to a position of legitimacy, integrity, principles, and good standards and practice. Their organizational position has demonstrably little to recommend it in those departments, and surpassing them with a superior position in those areas is a comparatively easy matter. Besides, a response made on such a basis is just better in terms of quality of life for all concerned, and the general public as well.]

Replaced - The public is provided with an answer, in the form of the parent group itself. It glides in, appearing pure and graceful, humanitarian, well-reasoned and kind. The solutions it appears to provide self-evidently work much better than those of the dummy group, and are hyped as fairly addressing all concerns - even if they don't. They do however address all concerns presented by the dummy group, and with the original group out of the way and its ideology now a dead issue, those of the dummy group are by far the predominant concerns and arguments. Often the general public are made to fear the dummy group, and the parent group will appear to represent safety. Typically the general public will glom on in support of the parent group, and the support will become overwhelming. Any remaining personnel within the dummy group who are deemed to be valuable assets are discreetly promoted into the parent group, and events are arranged to shut down the dummy group and optionally hold its remaining members accountable for its behavior... or physically neutralize them, with a minimum of public sympathy. That's an easy matter to accomplish once the general public revile it and blame it for all the problems to date. And this allows the parent group to appear - or in the case of the Vatican, to reappear - seemingly absolved of any sense of wrongdoing.

It's worth knowing that as the subversion of and influence over non-overt groups increases, the personnel within them are tasked with various social engineering agendas which even affect society on an overt basis as well. It's a comparatively simple matter to non-overtly direct complicit personnel to propagate various overt narratives, rhetoric, social and political arguments, to promote various ideologies and deprecate or malign others as needed. Frequently, the personnel of different subverted organizations are tasked with presenting as each side of a political or social issue, such as low-information faux-Christian bigotry courtesy of the Knights of Malta on the one side and feminist supremacist proto-Socialist hyperliberalism via the 'organized crime' franchise on the other. So in addition to the controlled corporate media, the general public are seeing attitudes and rhetoric predominate which, on both 'sides', are being directed by Rome and Babylon. To them it all seems quite organic, and most are typically either rejecting any thought that it might be contrived as ludicrous 'conspiracy theory', or else being sold no shortage of implausible, fraudulent narratives about it over social media by 'gurus' who serve the agendas of the very globalists they claim to be exposing. The compounded effects of all this manipulation tend to be quite effective... until of course the methods are exposed. Genuine truth exposers tend to be somewhat rare, as the People are currently predominantly separated into two groups: those who'd have the integrity to expose it all, and those who have learned how it all works because they've been complicit with it for quite a while.

Currently the literal 'U.S.' and 'U.K.' are culturally in the 'Vilify' stage, where the non-overt organizations there have been increasingly abandoning the pretense of being separate and distinct groups. They've also been demonstrating comparatively awful behavior, not only the bogus 'original' groups but the Antagonist groups as well, to enable the public mindset to be right to having the parent organizations, Rome and then Babylon, show up noticeably for the 'Replaced' stage.

In Asia by contrast, the infiltration and subversion of personnel isn't anywhere near as advanced. They're somewhere between their 'Muffle' and their 'Attrition' stages, while the strategic objective is the conversion of the Asian People within the dynastic group hierarchies. This is why their media has such an emphasis currently on "flood" [Roman and Babylonian Kabbalist symbol for bribery], "colors", everything is presented as being interesting and so exciting [to retain the Peoples' interest and keep the subversion from becoming prematurely noticeable and rejected], and trends like 'creepycute' are only just starting to make their appearance because the counter-Divine Will converted personnel are still in the process of converting and it hasn't come into full effect and force yet. Keep in mind that the Asian People are predominantly just as unaware of the subversion and its strategies as the People of the common law countries were, and that getting this information to any Asian friends and communities you know can become a major strategic equalizer for them which equips the People there to sort it out and gain their freedom. The Babylonian Kabbalists appear to have some major plans once they have the full resources of the major dynastic Asian societies and their proprietary techniques at their command, and we're all better off if the Asian People remain independent from Rome and Babylon.
